Performance Notes

All movements are to be played attacca.

Organ registrations are not indicated in the score. They are indicated in the organ part.

Movement VIII

Movement VIII requires two conductors. The on-stage conductor, along with conducting the on-stage musicians, is to provide cues for the vocalist, with the second conductor will shadow as the vocalist moves off-stage. The second conductor is to be positioned at the back of the hall where the vocalist will be able to look as he walks. The second conductor is responsible to keep the beat and to give cues for the vocalist. A score should not be necessary; the second conductor may simply shadow the on-stage conductor.

Immediately after Movement VII, the trumpet player proceeds offstage (preferably behind and/or above the audience, if possible). About ten seconds after the fourth crotale strike, the trumpet begins the solo from offstage. The trumpet should barely be audible through the sound of the organ. The trumpet solo is not to be aligned with anything the conductor or instrumentalists are doing.

Some time after the beginning of the trumpet solo (as marked in the score), the vocalist begins walking slowly to the back of the hall (opposite the trumpet). The walk to the back of the hall should be paced such that steps can be aligned with phrases or measures. Near the end of the vocal part, the vocalist should arrive at the back of the hall. Care should be taken that the vocal part always be just under the dynamic of the organ - audible, but not on the surface. Thus, the vocalist will probably need to increase in dynamic throughout the movement to compensate for the change in location and the increase in dynamic (texture) in the organ.

The organ should be registered such that the manual with the weights is louder than the manual played by the organist. The part played by the organist is to be audible just beneath the level of the manual with the weights.
